PLAYED LIKE CHAMPIONS.

Washington Put Up Better Ball than Bo

ton and Won the Game.

The Washington team put up a snappy, lively game yesterday and defeated Boston, 6 to 4, in a prettily played contest which was witnessed by about 1,500 people. If the locals had given similar exhibitions during the first two days of the week there would have been upwards of 4,000 present. There is nothing more fielde than a baseball audience, and it dwindles or increases as the quality of ball warrants. Yesterday's game was one which would have tickled the sporting palates of a big holiday crowd, and the home players would have tickled the sporting palates of a big holiday crowd, and the home players would have received an ovation for their really elever work. Pitcher Maul would have been the idol of the hour, as to his great work in the points and his timely stick work more than half the crodit of the victory is due.

But not Maul alone came in for a share of the laurels, as Hassamear and Hadford showed up strongly at the bat and aided in the run getting. Jovee, Cartwright, Abbey and Selbach flelded in fine shape, Selbach's two errors being more than atomed for by his subsequent effective work. Abbey caught seven flies in left and assisted once on a put out. He missed a long fly from Long's bat in the second inning, which cost a run. Jim McGuire caught in excellent style, made the first hit and first run for Washington, and yut out the last Boston batsman.

With the record of seven victories out of nine games played the champion Bostons anticipated another yesterday, and for six innings everything bokel lovely for them. Then there came a change, and the home team proved to be strong at a rally, and their persistence gave the champs somewhat of a case of rattles, as Stivetts let down, while his support weakened just enough to give Washington the opportunity to go to the front, where they remained to the end.

It was a game replete with brilliant fielding, and several sensational fly catches were made by the fielders. Hugh Duffy and McCarthy killed apparent safe drives by McGuire and Hassamaer, while Tebeau pulled down a long fly from McCarthy's bat after a good run. Badford had but one chance in the field, which lucky Paul gathered in right in the test of the sun, proving Radford to be the original man not afraid of his shadow. Timothy Hurst had been secured to officiate as umpire by President Young, and he got through the ordeal without any trouble. There was necessarily some little kicking from both sides, but Tim didn't mind it and everything passed off quietly. Boston lost the game because of being outbatted and going t to 1, second; Sir Rae (Yetter), 40 to 1, third.

FOURTH RACE—Thirtee-sixteenths of a mile. Joeker, 106.

First hall pitched safely to left, Long reached his first on balls and Duffy attempted to sacrifice, but forced Lowe at third. Me-Carthy flied to left, making two out. Long stole third and came home on McGuire's throw to Selbach, the latter making a poor return of the ball. Nash was thrown out at first by Joyce. The visitors did their last scoring in the second ioning, when they piled up three unearned runs. Maul began by sending Tucker and Fannon to base on balls, and Ganzell got in a safe single past second. McGuire had a passed bail, Selbach lost his bead on Lowe's grounder, and Abbey muffed Long's fly, three tailies being the result. Lowe and Long were both thrown out at second.

Lowe and Long were both thrown out at second.

Washington broke the ice in the second, when McGuire and Hassamaer lined out singles. Then Selbach and Cartwright filed out, but Tebeau was hard to please, and reached first on balls, Maul coming to the rescue with a rattling double to left center, sending in McGuire and Hassamaer. Tebeau tried to reach the plate also, but was caught.

From the third up to the seventh inning the game was hotly contested, the twirling being clever and the fielding of unusual merit. In the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh innings not a Bostonian reached first base, while in the eighth and ninth the visitors could not get as far as second. For Washington Radford got around to third inable fifth, but was left, while in the sixth McGuire was thrown out at while in the sixth McGuire was thrown out at
